Let's move now to South-East Asia. There, a big storm with heavy rainfall of over 700 mm and wind speeds as high as 120 kph has smashed into the Philippines. It isn't as violent as some other storms, but it's bad enough to cause many problems. Mudslides on steep hills have destroyed many homes and worse is expected. Emergency workers are moving people away from more dangerous areas to places of safety.

Now we cross the Pacific to North America. In the south-west, California has been experiencing hot, dry winds for weeks and wildfires have started in several places. Firefighters are working hard to control them and stop them spreading farther. Meanwhile, east in Oklahoma, several violent tornadoes have destroyed a number of homes. But thanks to better warning systems than in the past, no lives have been lost.

Finally, out over the warm Atlantic Ocean, this year's first hurricane is being born far out at sea. It's starting to move north-west towards the Caribbean Islands and Florida. How big will it get and where will it go? We don't have enough information yet, so it's too early to say. So ... watch World Weather again tomorrow to learn the latest.
